The Christmas Trade of 1899

Is fully prepared to handle it. His three large stores are well filled with Fall and Winter Goods of all kinds, and what makes them most attractive is the fact that nearly every article offered for sale is at the old price. This is a very great advantage to the buyer, because these old prices are based on four and five cents cotton, when cotton is now selling at seven and a half cents.

I am now offering bargains in all lines, and many goods are being sold at prices lower than they can be bought at.

My business this Fall has so largely increased over what it was last season that I have found it necessary to increase my clerical force considerably. My corps of assistants is now as follows:

Mrs. Nannie Wardlaw, William S. Penney,

W. D. Wilson, J. Gordon White, J. L. Perrin, W. M. Calder, J. Gilliam Aiken,

Thomas G. Perrin, George White, Jr.

Wm. H. White, The above have all had large experience, and are throughly acquainted with business and business methods, and therefore, I can safely guarantee the very best attention to any and all who will favor me with their patronage.

Everybody in need of goods is most cordially invited to see us. We want your trade and will treat you right. Try us. You will not be disappointed.
